

Mary Serveta studied at the Department of French Language and Literature at the University of Athens and then she did postgraduate studies in Didactics of Languages and Culture at the University of New Sorbonne Paris III.

She has taught French language and culture at all levels of education and to a diverse audience of students of all ages (formal, professional and adult education). She is a member of the writing team of the Greek publishing house of French-language educational books Trait d'Union where she has collaborated for the publication of three books of learning French level B2. She participated for 20 years as an examiner and grader in the examinations of the French Ministry of Education for the DELF-DALF diplomas and the Greek Ministry of Education for the State Certificate of Language Proficiency in French. She has been for a number of years an elected member of the Board of Directors and the supervisory board of the Greek Association of French Teachers and a member of the organizing committee of three conferences and annual seminars. She participated in the organization of the artistic festival "The Little Paris of Athens" as a translator and member of the organizing committee. She is a member of the European network of teachers Teachers4Europe